Big Three On-Line Platform Part of Business Deconstruction

2/29/2000 The Big Three's decision to combine their on-line procurement platform foreshadows the next generation of business-to-business e-commerce, says a management consulting firm today. Cross-industry supply networks like the one Ford, GM, and DaimlerChrysler just formed, represent a critical and inevitable event in business-to-business e-commerce, says Thomas Wurster, SVP at The Boston Consulting Group. The only hurdle to more of these relationships -- and it's not a big hurdle at all -- is that companies and industries agree to common technological communications standards to make those networks more efficient, he says.

"Ford, GM and DaimlerChrysler are deconstructing their own businesses," adds Philip Evans, another SVP at the group. "They are taking a valuable information asset from their businesses -- their combined purchasing buy of more than $160 billion -- and leveraging it in a creative way to wring more value out of it. It is good to see incumbents such as Ford and GM deconstruct themselves, rather than value out of it."
